CATCHWORDS: Practice - Amendment - Disclosure - Defendant seeking disclosure of documents previously disclosed for summary as the correct law - Whether disclosure should be granted - Whether defendant to be allowed to amend defence -	judgment application - Defendant seeking to amend defence to substitute Russian law - CPR 17, 14.
INTRODUCTION: The parties were two wealthy Russian businessmen, with interests in, among other things, television, oil and alumi company. The claimant alleged that he had been induced by intimidation to dispose of his interest in Sibneft to th tort of intimidation. He further claimed that in breach of fiduciary or contract duty the defendant had disposed of claimant's shares much less valuable. The claimant sought to recover that loss as compensation for the alleged br strike out of the claims (see and). The instant proceedings were interlocutory applications by the defendant for a by the claimant and for permission to re-amend its defence to withdraw the admission that English law was the law	nium. Both parties had interests in 'Sibneft', an oil company, and 'Rusal', an aluminium a defendant at a reduced price. He sought to recover his loss as compensation for the a large number of shares in Rusal to companies controlled by D, rendering the eaches of duty. The defendant applied unsuccessfully for summary judgment/and or n order that specific disclosure in relation to the 'Patarkarsishvili materials' be provided w of the alleged Sibneft tort and to substitute Russian law as the appropriate law.
In relation to the disclosure application, the defendant based his application on the fact, inter alia, that there had contents of the Patarkatishwil materials in order to defend the defendant's summary judgment application in the l deployed part of the privileged communications in relation to the merits of the claimant's claim, the claimant had we therefore now obliged, by the application of the principle of collateral waiver, to give disclosure of all documents no Slazenger International Ltd v Joe Bloggs Sports Ltd , Somatru Ltd v Sinclair Roche & Temperley as well as Derby interlocutory proceedings did generally suffice to engage the principle of collateral waiver; and (b) where such dep not possible to 'turn back the clock' by deciding not to deploy the privileged evidence at trial. In relation to the ag law, consideration was given to CPR 17, 14 and para 7.2 PD14. The claimant opposed the application on the basis.	been extensive deployment that had already been made in court of parts of the igh Court and Court of the Appeal. Accordingly, it was submitted that, having so raived any privilege which he might have had in the Patarkatsishvili materials, and was alating to the same subject matter. Reliance was placed on the decisions of Dunlop v Weldor to support the submissions that: (a) deployment of privileged material in alogment addressed to the merits had taken place in an interlocutory hearing, it was plication for permission to amend the defence to plead Russian law as the governing inter alia, that it would delay its trial preparations thus causing them real prejudice.
